TO PUBLICIZE APPLE BLOOM OF THIS AREA

Committee Appropriates $150 To Advertise Orchards Of County.

FISHER INVITED

Governor John S. Fisher, Senator David A. Reed and Secretary of Agriculture Hyde have been invited to come to Gettysburg for a tour of inspection of the apple blossoms in the Adams county fruit belt by the Gettysburg Lions Club Apple Blossom committee.

This was announced at a meeting of the committee held Wednesday evening at the Hotel Gettysburg.

One hundred and fifty dollars was underwritten by the members of the committee as a fund for publicity purposes in connection with the bloom this year. Photographs are to be taken of various orchard sections both from the ground and from the air and are to be distributed with news matter to newspapers throughout the east.

Is Most Beautiful

An analysis of the fruit belt of the county as compared with other sections revealed that the fruit bloom here is far more spectacular and beautiful than anywhere else in the country. It was developed that there are over five hundred thousand apple trees in the upper end fruit area which placed this county in the lead in Pennsylvania. For the area covered, the county also maintains a commanding position in nation-wide apple production.

The Lions Club committee is inviting representatives of various organizations of Gettysburg and the county as well as all growers to meet with them at the weekly dinner of the club next Monday night immediately after which a meeting of this enlarged group will be held for the purpose of forming a permanent organization to direct plans for an apple blossom festival of some distinctive nature next year.

In Bloom Next Week
The trees this year will be in full bloom about the middle or the end of next week and in order to facilitate tours through the orchard sections arrow direction signs are being prepared and will be placed along the route.

The route follows directly through several of the largest orchards and includes that tract of over one thousand acres which is solidly covered with apple orchards none of which have so much as a fence between them to designate the bounds of ownership. Prominent growers of the county claim this is one of the few sections in the country where the trees are so concentrated and thus afford so spectacular a sight.

Endorsements of the observance of the bloom in Adams county have come to the committee from various sources.

PEOPLE'S STORE IS IN NEW HOME

The People's Cash Store, Gettysburg's oldest grocery store, has completed moving, necessitated by the sale recently of the building formerly occupied, half a dozen doors further up Baltimore street, on the same side, to the northwest corner of Baltimore and Middle streets.

W. F. Gilliland, proprietor, announces that the new store will be formally opened to the public Friday evening and a special invitation is extended the public to visit and inspect the larger quarters. No groceries will be sold Friday evening. One of the main advantages of the new store room is the opportunity it offers to better display his stock. Mr. Gilliland says, "The location now occupied by the People's Cash Store is the same which for many years was occupied by the general grocery and dry goods store of Fahnestock Brothers, for years the leading store in Gettysburg. Mr. Gilliland occupied his old location continuously for 19 years, having purchased the store there in 1910 when he gave up farming to go into the mercantile business."

LEVIES ON PROPERTY
Sheriff G. D. Morrison has levied upon the personal property of H. S. Hill, Gettysburg, for a judgment of $222.47 in favor of G. R. Thompson and Son.

WEATHER REPORT
Eastern Pennsylvania: Mostly cloudy tonight and Friday. Possibly occasional light showers. Slowly rising temperature.

44 Known Dead in Tornado That Sweeps Arkansas Area

Little Rock, Ark., April 11 (AP).—Forty-four persons were known dead, several missing and believed dead and almost 100 injured in a tornado which swept through sections of North Arkansas last night.

21 persons were dead at Swift and 5 at Guion. The latter town was reported to have blown completely away. All the victims were white.

Six negroes were reported killed in Parkin and four others at Prineade.

Rescue work was hampered by the rain soaked roads, by debris strewn about and by swollen streams.

Hospitals Crowded

The death list was expected to mount as the parties searched the desolate areas for bodies. Hospitals in the vicinity had long since been filled with the injured.

A vacant store building at Swift was converted into a temporary morgue. All the dead and injured in this district were farmers and members of their families. Several large families were crushed to death under the debris of their homes.

The tornado affected an area within a radius of 50 miles of Swift. It moved along a path three hundred yards wide over a serpentine course for a distance of 8 miles.

A trail of dead live stock was left by the storm. Hens and geese were found without a trace of a feather after being blown about through the tornado.

Warned by the roar of the storm, Carl Wagster rushed his family out of their house and clasped his wife and three children in a tight embrace. They thus escaped injury while their home crumbled to bits.

Not a house was left standing in several small communities.

YOUNG MOTHER IS KILLED BY HER HUSBAND

John Marsh, 52, At Large, After Shooting Wife With A Shotgun.

THREATENS WIFE

Appearing suddenly before his wife, Beulah, 30, from whom he had been estranged since Sunday, John Marsh, 52, shot her twice with a shotgun, killing her instantly, at 5 o'clock, Wednesday afternoon.

The slaying occurred on the C. N. Myers farm, near Bachman's church, in Carroll county, Maryland. John Roser is tenant on the farm and Mr. and Mrs. Preston Blank, brother-in-law and sister of the murdered woman, work for Roser.

Marsh, who was still at large today, is said to have fled northward across the Mason-Dixon line. He is described as a man of slight stature, about five feet, five inches tall and weighing about 125 pounds. He is bald and clean shaven.

Was Milking Cows
Mrs. Marsh was milking in the barnyard when her husband approached her and opened fire at close range with a double barreled shotgun, one load entering her head at the right temple and the other lodging in her right side just under the shoulder.

Without hurrying, Marsh left the scene of the killing, closing the barnyard gate behind him. The tragedy was witnessed by George Willet, 10, who lives with the Roser family.

Marsh was last seen walking across the fields in a northerly direction. He is said to have threatened the lives of two or three persons after shooting his wife.

The local sub-station of the state police was notified of the shooting about 10 o'clock, Wednesday night, and Trooper Floyd L. Maurer drove to the Marsh home, a short distance from the Roser place. A search of the Marsh premises by Trooper Maurer failed to show any sign that the fugitive had returned there after the shooting. The officer patrolled the road between Littlestown and Union Mills in an effort to apprehend Marsh, but found no trace of the man.

Couple Quarreled
The murder was the culmination of a year of domestic unhappiness in the Marsh home, which is located about a quarter-mile from Deep Run schoolhouse. Marsh, it is said, had on frequent occasions threatened his wife.

Last Sunday the Marshes were said to have had a violent quarrel, which ended in Mrs. Marsh leaving home and going to live with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Milton Flickinger, near Union Mills. Marsh followed her to the parental home, from which he was driven away. Fearing his return, Mrs. Marsh went to the home of a sister, Mrs. Preston Blank, near Bachman's church, on Tuesday.

Carroll county officers and posses began hunting for Marsh as soon as word of the shooting was received in Westminster.

It was learned that on Monday, Mrs. Marsh appeared before a Westminster justice of the peace, where she laid an information against her husband, charging him with assault and battery with intent to kill.

Coroner George E. Benson, of Carroll county, viewed the body, and allowed John W. Little, Littlestown undertaker, to remove it to his place to be prepared for burial. An inquest into the woman's death was held this afternoon when Marsh was formally accused as her slayer.

Funeral Saturday
Mrs. Marsh is survived by two children, Pauline, 10, and John, 4; four sisters, Mrs. Preston Blank, where the shooting occurred; Mrs. Jacob Hahn, Deatrick's Mill; Mrs. Daniel Bair, York; Mrs. George Utz, near Union Mills; three brothers, Sterling Flickinger, near Mayberry; Curvin Flickinger, Union Mills, and Bernard, at home. Her parents also survive.

Funeral services will be held Saturday afternoon at 1 o'clock from the Blank home, with interment at Bachman's church.

THE FAIRFIELD POST OFFICE

The following letters throw further light on the early history of this office. John McKinley, to whom the second letter is addressed, became postmaster in 1801.

"January 21st, 1799.

"Mr. John McMunn,

"Sir:

"On the first of September, 1798, I sent you an appointment as Deputy Post Master of Fairfield, Pennsylvania, and inclosed a blank bond and oaths of office which were to be returned when executed. The Bond however has not been received here—though I am informed you have done the business at Fairfield since Mr. Taylor left the office, nor have any returns been received since it has been in your hands.

"As I am told it is inconvenient for you to hold that Appointment I have concluded on making Mr. McKinley an offer of it and if he accepts it you will be pleased to deliver over to him the maps of the Post Roads with all Letters and Blanks remaining on hand and any other Articles of Post Office.

"I am, etc.,
"J. H. (Hersham)."

"Feb'y 18th, 1799.

"Mr. John McKinley,

"Sir:

"I am favour'd with your letter of the 29th ultimo inclosing the Oaths you had taken as Deputy Post Master of Fairfield. As I find my information respecting Mr. McMunn's removal from Fairfield is not correct and you have not executed the Bond I sent you I have concluded to continue the office in the hands of Mr. McMunn. You are quite mistaken as to the circumstance you have mentioned of a number of Persons holding the Appointment of Post Master without giving Bonds or taking the Oaths required by Law. It may, have happened in a few instances But in a few only and where there are in this department it will sometimes happen Notwithstanding every diligence is used to Obtain the Bonds from the Deputies.

"If Mr. McMunn should remove and a suitable Character cannot be obtained as his successor the Office will be discontinued.

"I am, etc.,
"J. H."

Local Seminary May Be Merged With Two Others

Joint Committee On Seminary Relations Makes Favorable Report On Establishment Of One Large Lutheran Seminary Within 20 Miles Of Philadelphia.

SUBMIT REPORT TO BOARDS

The Gettysburg Lutheran theological seminary will be closed and the institution will be merged with Susquehanna and Philadelphia seminaries, in all probability, at the beginning of the 1931-1932 school term, if the report of the joint committee on seminary relations meets with the approval of the directorate of the three seminaries and the synods involved.

The merged seminary will be located within 20 miles of City Hall, Philadelphia, but not at Mt. Airy where the Philadelphia seminary is located.

This information is contained in the report of the joint committee on seminary relations released to the directorate of the three institutions, a copy of which was received by The Times through the courtesy of Dr. John Aberly, president of the Gettysburg seminary, and a member of the general committee.

It is made clear that the proposed merger is still in committee stage, that it has not been acted upon by the directors of the three institutions concerned and that it has not been submitted to the various synods involved.

Start Move in 1926

First action on the proposed merger of the Lutheran seminaries in Eastern America, was taken at the Richmond convention of the United Lutheran church in 1926. The resolution adopted at the Richmond convention upon the recommendation of the Commission on Theological Education recommended "that seminaries located on contiguous territory be urged to consider whether the best interest of the church would not be served by consolidation, or by such affiliation as may unify and correlate their work."

Mother Of Local Woman Is Buried

Funeral services were held today at Ursula for Mrs. M. J. Kuhlman, mother of Mrs. A. R. Wentz, Seminary avenue, who died at the home of another daughter, Mrs. Martin Clare, Apollo. Mrs. Wentz was called to her mother's bedside ten days ago.

Constable's Sale Is Held Today

A constable's sale of the personal property at Edgar Warren's electrical store, York street, was held this morning by George B. Aughinbaugh to satisfy a landlord's warrant for $245, secured by Harry Oyler, Sr., owner of the building in which the store was located.

Pursuant to this resolution, the report of the joint committee on seminary relations continues, the chairman of the Commission on Theological Education called a conference of the presidents and presidents of the boards of directors of Hartwick, New York; Gettysburg, Susquehanna, and Philadelphia seminaries, at Harrisburg, November 15, 1927.

Favor Consolidation
This conference agreed on a preamble and two resolutions, one of which declared that "provided plans can be worked out so that nothing essential for which the various institutions have stood need be sacrificed, we would favor consolidation."

As a result of this recommendation, the joint committee's report continues, committees were appointed by the boards of the Gettysburg and Philadelphia seminaries and Susquehanna university. The board of Hartwick seminary declined to appoint a committee.

The first meeting of the joint committee was held in Harrisburg, June 22, 1928.

On the basis of a consolidation of the three seminaries, it was agreed "that the doctrinal basis of such a consolidated seminary should be the doctrinal basis of the United Lutheran Church in America."

Three sub-committees were appointed. One to consider legal aspects, another to recommend a plan of organization and control and a third to make recommendations concerning location.

On December 19, 1928 the joint committee met at Harrisburg.

No Legal Obstacles
The legal committee reported that in its opinion there would be no legal difficulties in the way of a consolidation of the three seminaries and that so far as their investigations had gone, it appeared that there would be no loss in funds to any of the institutions by such a consolidation, except for an amount of approximately $20,000 which had been bequeathed to the Gettysburg seminary on condition that it remain permanently at Gettysburg.

The sub-committee on organization and control reported "that the charter of the consolidated seminary shall be the charter of the Gettysburg seminary, with such amendments as may be necessary."

The consolidated seminary, if the report of the joint committee meets with the approval of the various boards and synods, will

FISHER GETS
WHAT HE WANTS

Legislative Program Of Administration Is Reported "In The Bag."

Harrisburg, April 11 (AP).—The administration's legislative program today was regarded as "in the bag".

With the end of the legislature in sight the major issues in which Governor Fisher and the Republican leaders are deeply interested are lined up for final passage with no portentous signs threatening to block their approval.

The legislature reconvenes Monday night for the final week bills bearing administration labels will have the right of way and will find their way into the governor's hands with dispatch.

The twelve year highway program and the motor code, increasing license fees and raising the speed limit five miles an hour, will be approved Monday night by the Senate. The next day the four cent gas tax will be accorded senatorial approval and follow the highway program into the governor's office.

Controls Assembly Governor Fisher has successfully demonstrated that he has complete control of the assembly and there is no reason to believe that his highway program may be defeated by last minute maneuvers. The House and Senate held their first Thursday sessions today in an effort to clear the decks and avoid a jam in the final week. More than a hundred bills were on final passage in the House.

Senator William H. Clark, Chester county, announced that he would vote for the amended voting machine bill.

"I never said I would vote against the amended bill," the senator said. "I am not going to block any of the governor's legislation. The governor wants it, Joseph R. Grundy wants it and so does W. L. Mellon. I am regular."

Dr. Leo F. Stock and Press Correspondent Differ on New Italian Pact with Vatican

The leading feature of April Current History is a debate on "Italy's Agreement with the Vatican," between Leo Francis Stock, professor of history, Catholic University of America, who endorses the treaty, and John Hearley, former foreign correspondent of the United Press in Italy, who criticizes it.

"The treaty, first of all," says Professor Stock, "recognizes the sovereignty of the Holy See over the newly created Vatican City." * * * There are no grounds for the insinuation that the Pope, in order to establish the principle of the union of Church and State, will in time seek political power * * * The Holy Father would lack both the temporal possessions and the civil subjects necessary to aspire to any such end." The writer comments with approval on the territorial immunity granted by the treaty and discusses diplomatic representation, especially the possibility of an interchange of Ministers or Ambassadors between the Vatican and the United States; the negative attitude of the Pope toward the League of Nations; the effect of the operation of canon law in Italy; compulsory religious teaching in the public schools, and the right of religious communities and other ecclesiastical to own property. "The agreement," he concludes, "is a compromise. The Holy See has gained its freedom and independence * * * but at the sacrifice of the Eternal City, a loss which will sadden the hearts of most Catholics. Italy will gain a more cordial sympathy for its government, and a more harmonious national life."

Many Complications Seen Mr. Hearley, in his "Criticism of the Agreement," takes a very different point of view. He says "it has international implications which are puzzling and even disturbing to the chancelleries of both the Old World and the New."

He reveals the fact that Benedict XV made an unsuccessful attempt to obtain actual temporal sovereignty by sending a confidential mission to Paris some time after the armistice was signed. This failure, he declares, left the Papacy only one alternative—to turn to the Italian Government for a solution. The new Papal State, having its own citizens, stamps, coinage, radio and railway systems, he asserts, brings up passport, quota and naturalization complications with the United States and other foreign countries. As to Italian foreign policy, he says: "Fascism has suddenly taken on a Catholic significance which it never had before * * * If there be any logic in action, the Pope is committed to the Fascist foreign propaganda abroad, and Italy's Fascists are committed to the Pope."

Mr. Hearley includes in these implications the Balkans, Germany and France and Latin America, pointing out that "the Fascist movement is already well organized and flourishing in a number of Central and South American countries, which would be the target of any overt propaganda of Fascism against us." How, he queries, would these Catholic countries of Central and South America react to this, in view of the alliance of the Pope and Mussolini?

D., writes on "Herbert Hoover and the Quakers," bringing out the development of the Quaker cult and its influence on Mr. Hoover.

THE TRAIL OF '28

CHAPTER XXVIII

WHAT WAS GONE BEFORE: There was a "The Froggish" Salvo. Jim and myself, and the lion-like gold rush of '28. The settlements were filled with dance-hall girls, gamblers and gold-seekers. I met Berna with whom I fell in love. Thousands struggled over the almost impassable trails which claimed a toll of life and property. Lawlessness was rampant. A snowslide buried hundreds. After many thrilling adventures we arrived at Dawson City, where Berna's relatives plan to marry her to Locasto, a notorious character. We were advised there was no land available. Berna promised to marry me in a year. Many more adventures and three of us joined new stampede. An Indian made us a partnership proposition and after working all winter finally struck it rich. Berna was to be married but I was taken with typhoid. Hear of Locasto's threat to get weak. I thought Berna's cabin. Locasto threw me out and I fell unconscious. Locasto had Berna in a new stampede. In a dance hall. Distressed, I hit a fast pace on the downward trail. Finally I collapsed at the end of the trail. Death came to me in Berna's cabin. I recovered. I again urged Berna to marry me, but she would not, saying that we should continue in our happiness as we were. Out in the snow Locasto and "The Froggish" came to make the nearest settlement. "The Worm" beats Locasto unconscious while he sleeps, takes all the food and leaves him.

At first he thought he was stiff with cold, but a downward glance showed him his condition. He was helpless. He grew sick at the pit of his stomach, and glared at the dogs. They were drawing in on him. They seemed to bulk suddenly, to grow huge and menacing. Their gleaming teeth snapped in his face. He could fancy these teeth stripping the flesh from his body, gnawing at his bones with drooling jaws. Violently he shuddered. He must try to free himself, so that at least he could fight.

Clearly the Worm had done his job, but he had hardly reckoned on the strength of this man. With a vast throng of fear Locasto tried to free himself. Tenser, tenser grew the things; they strained, they bit into his flesh, but they would not break. Yet as he relaxed it seemed to him they were less tight. Then he rested for another effort.

Once again the gaunt, grey bitch was crawling up. He remembered how often he had starved it, clutched it until it could barely stand. "Now it was going to get even. It was snap at his throat, its out his windpipe, bury its fangs in his bleeding flesh. He cursed it in the old way. With a spring it backed out again and stood with the others. He made another giant effort. Once again he felt the things strain and strain; then, when he ceased, he imagined they were still looser.

The dogs seemed to have lost all fear. They stood in a circle within a few feet of him, regarding him intently. They smelled the blood on his head, and a slaver ran from their jaws. Again he cursed them, but this time they did not move. They seemed to realize he could not harm them. With their evilly slanted eyes they watched his struggles. Strange, wise, uncanny brutes, they were biding their time, waiting to rush in on him, to rend him.

Again he tried to get free. Now he feared he could move his arm a little. He must hurry, for every instant the maulers were growing bolder. Another strain and a wrench. He was able to squeeze his right arm from under the rawhide. He felt the foul breath of the dogs on his face, but he struck at them. They jumped back, then, as if at a signal, they sprang in again. There was no time to lose. They were attacking him in earnest. Quickly he wrenched out his other arm. He was just in time, for the dogs were upon him.

He struggled to his knees and shielded his head with his arms. Wildly he swung at the nearest dog. Full on the face he struck it, and it shot back as if hit by a bullet. But the others were on him. They had him down, snarling and ripping, a mad ferment of fury. Two of them were making for his face. As he lay on his back he felt each bite through his throat. His hands were torn and bleeding, but he had them fast. In his grip of steel they struggled to free themselves in vain. They backed, they writhed, they twisted in a bow. With his huge hands he was choking them, choking them to death, using them as a shield against the other three. Then slowly he worked himself into a sitting position. He hurled one of the dogs to the tent door. He swung bludgeoning blows at the others. They fled yelping and howling. He still held the Mackenzie River bitch. Getting his knee on her body, he bent her almost into a circle, bent her till her back broke with a snap.

Then he rose and freed himself from the remaining things. He was torn and cut and bleeding, but he had triumphed.

"Oh, the devil!" he growled, grinding his teeth. "He would have me chewed to rags by maulmates."

He stared around.

"He's taken everything, the scum! left me to starve. Ha! one thing he's forgotten—the matches. At least I can keep warm."

He picked up the canister of matches and relit the stove.

"I'll kill him for this," he muttered. "Night and day I'll follow him. I'll camp on his trail till I find him. Then I'll torture him. I'll strip him and leave him naked in the snow."

He slipped into his snowshoes, gave a last look around to see that no food had been left, and with a final growl of fury he started in pursuit. Ahead of him, ploughing their way through the virgin snow, he could see the dragging track of the long snowshoes. He examined it, and noted that it was sharp and crisp at the edges.

"He's got a good five hours' start of me! Traveling fast, too, by the length of the track."

He had a thought of capturing the dogs and hitching them up; but, thoroughly terrified, they had retreated into the woods. To overtake this man, to glut his lust for revenge, he must depend on his own strength and endurance.

"Now, Jack Locasto," he told himself grimly, "you've got a fight on your hands, such a fight as you never had before. Get right down to it."

So, with head bowed and shoulders sloping forward, he darted on the track of the Worm.

"He's got to break trail, the viper! and that's where I score. I can make twice the time. Oh, just wait, you little devil! Just wait!"

He ground his teeth vindictively, and put an inch more onto his stride. He was descending a long, open valley that seemed from its trackless snows to have been immemorially life-shunned and accursed.

"I can fight this accursed land and beat it out every time," he exulted. "It can't get any the better of me. It was cold, so cold that it was difficult to imagine it could ever be warm again. To expose flesh was to feel instantly the sharp sting that heralds frostbite. As he ran, the sharp intake of icy air made his lungs seem to contract. His eyes smarted and tingled. The lashes froze closely. Ice formed in his nostrils and his nose began to bleed. He pulled up a moment.

He struck off almost at right angles to the trail he had been following, over a low range of hills. It was evil going, and as he broke through the snowcrust mile after wearying mile, he felt himself grow weaker and weaker. "Buck up, old man," he adjured himself fiercely. "You've got to fight, fight."

There was a strange stillness in the air, not the natural stillness of the Wild, but an unhealthy one, as of a suspension of something, of a vacuum, of bated breath.

"Blizzard, by thunder!" he gasped. Was that a breath of wind that stung his cheek? Was it a snowflake that drifted along with it? Denser and denser grew the gloom, and now there was a roaring as of a great wind. King Blizzard was come.

"I guess I'm done for," he hissed through clenched teeth. "But I'll fight to the finish. I'll die game."

It was on him now with a swoop and a roar. He was in the thick of a mud-grey darkness, a bitter, blank darkness full of whirling wind-eddies and vast furies of snow. He could not see more than a few feet before him. The stinging flakes blinded him; the coal-black night engulfed him. In that seething turmoil of the elements he was as helpless as a child.

"I guess you're on your last trail, Jack Locasto," he muttered grimly. Nevertheless he lowered his head and butted desperately into the heart of the storm. He was very faint from lack of food, but despair had given him a new strength, and he plunged through drift and flurry with the fury of a goaded bull.

The night had fallen black as the pit. He was in an immensity of darkness, a darkness that packed close up to him, and hugged him, and enfolded him like a blanket.

He had forgotten his hunger. Those wild visions of gluttony had gone from him. He had forgotten his thirst for revenge, forgotten everything but his own dire peril.

"Keep moving, keep moving for God's sake," he urged himself hoarsely. "You'll freeze if you let up a moment. Don't let up, don't!"

But oh, how hard it was not to rest! Every muscle in his body seemed to beg and pray for rest, yet the spirit in him drove them to work anew. He was making a certain mad headway, traveling, always traveling. He doubted not he was doomed, but instinct made him fight on as long as an atom of strength remained.

He floundered to his armpits in a snowdrift. He struggled out and staggered on once more. In the mad buoyancy of that cutting wind he scarce could stand upright. His parka was frozen stiff as a board. He could feel his hands grow numb in his mits. From his fingers the icy cold crept up and up. Long since he had cut a strip from the Indian boots he was wearing, and held it over the fire. The hair singed away and the corners crisped and charred. He put it in his mouth. It was pleasantly warm, but even his strong teeth refused to meet it. However, he tore it into smaller pieces, and bolted them.

At last the dawn came, that evil, sneaking, corpse-like dawn, and Locasto flung himself once more on the trail. He was not feeling so fit now. Hunger and loss of blood had weakened him so that his stride insensibly shortened, and his step had lost its spring. However, he plodded on doggedly, an incarnation of vengeance and hate. He was not making the time he had reckoned on. The worm must be a long way ahead. Still he did not despair. The little man might rest a day, or even sleep, but Locasto would not. Locasto pictured with gloating joy the terror of the Worm as he awoke to find himself overtaken. Oh, the snake! the vermin! On! On!

"Curse this infernal country!" He had not eaten and the icy air begot a ravenous hunger. He dreamed of food, but chiefly of bacon, fat, greasy bacon. How glorious it would be just to eat of it, raw, tallow bacon! He had nothing to eat. He would have nothing till he had overtaken the Worm. On! On!

He came to where the Worm had made a camp. There were the ashes of a fire.

"Curse him; he's got some matches after all," he said with bitter chagrin. Eagerly he searched all around in the snow to see if he could not find even a crumb of food. There was nothing. He pushed on. Night fell and he was forced to make camp.

Oh, he was hungry! The night was vast and splendid, a spendthrift night scattering everywhere its largesse of stars. The cold had a crystalline quality and the trees dotted strangely in the silence. He built a huge fire; that at least he could have, and through eighteen hours of darkness he crouched by it, afraid to sleep for fear of freezing.

"If I only had a tin to boil water in," he muttered; "there's lots of reindeer moss, and I could stew some of my mukluks. Ah! I'll try and roast a bit of them."

You, too, may have a clear skin

THOUSANDS of people have weak, impure blood—to this may be attributed pimples, boils, eczema, "run-down" systems, rheumatism and even more serious ailments.

Without plenty of rich, red blood, there could be no strong, sturdy, powerful men, or beautiful, healthy women.

When you get the number of your red-blood-cells back to normal, that sluggish, let-down feeling, loss of appetite, those pains usually called rheumatism, boils, pimples and skin troubles disappear. You get hungry again and sleep soundly; firm flesh takes the place of that which was once flabby. You feel strong. Your nerves become steady. You are resistant to disease.

Throughout more than a hundred years S.S.S. has been a blessing to millions of people who have taken advantage of its wonderful medicinal properties. It is Nature's own blood tonic for an unhealthy one, as of a suspension of something, of a vacuum, of bated breath.

He was not making the time he had reckoned on. The worm must be a long way ahead. Still he did not despair. The little man might rest a day, or even sleep, but Locasto would not. Locasto pictured with gloating joy the terror of the Worm as he awoke to find himself overtaken. Oh, the snake! the vermin! On! On!

"Curse this infernal country!" He had not eaten and the icy air begot a ravenous hunger. He dreamed of food, but chiefly of bacon, fat, greasy bacon. How glorious it would be just to eat of it, raw, tallow bacon! He had nothing to eat. He would have nothing till he had overtaken the Worm. On! On!

He came to where the Worm had made a camp. There were the ashes of a fire.

"Curse him; he's got some matches after all," he said with bitter chagrin. Eagerly he searched all around in the snow to see if he could not find even a crumb of food. There was nothing. He pushed on. Night fell and he was forced to make camp.

Oh, he was hungry! The night was vast and splendid, a spendthrift night scattering everywhere its largesse of stars. The cold had a crystalline quality and the trees dotted strangely in the silence. He built a huge fire; that at least he could have, and through eighteen hours of darkness he crouched by it, afraid to sleep for fear of freezing.

He cut a strip from the Indian boots he was wearing, and held it over the fire. The hair singed away and the corners crisped and charred. He put it in his mouth. It was pleasantly warm, but even his strong teeth refused to meet it. However, he tore it into smaller pieces, and bolted them.

At last the dawn came, that evil, sneaking, corpse-like dawn, and Locasto flung himself once more on the trail. He was not feeling so fit now. Hunger and loss of blood had weakened him so that his stride insensibly shortened, and his step had lost its spring. However, he plodded on doggedly, an incarnation of vengeance and hate. He was not making the time he had reckoned on. The worm must be a long way ahead. Still he did not despair. The little man might rest a day, or even sleep, but Locasto would not. Locasto pictured with gloating joy the terror of the Worm as he awoke to find himself overtaken. Oh, the snake! the vermin! On! On!

TODAY'S TALK

By GEORGE MATTHEWS ADAMS

LOVE AND SACRIFICE

THE significant thing about pure pleasure is that it is so transitory. At the height of pleasure it seems to the recipient that it is sure to last forever—but at that moment it always begins to fade away.

On the other hand, take service, unselfishness, love or sacrifice. Each in itself is a part of the other. At the height of one's gifts to someone else, the rarest and rarest happiness just brings.
At such a stage it is that beauty of character blooms—waves each of its colorful petals to the light, asserting its gladness. Love and sacrifice linger for so very long. They never quite disappear from the earth once they have given their perfume.

The gaiety of selfishness, its gilded glamour, and its boasted worth fade like mist before the light which is so permanent.

Such restfulness and peacefulness come to the one who is always thinking of others and of some new way to make some one else happy. I often think that "still happiness" is about the most satisfactory happiness in this world. That happiness which comes to one over and over again as the consciousness comes that much has been done to give happiness to others!

We can be all alone in a faraway country or peaceful place, and yet we are not alone. We are accompanied by "beautiful, tall angels" as it were, talking to us, giving us renewed delight because of the spots of beauty planted far back in the years that have receded and gone from view.

The love and sacrifice of a mother or father, a brother or sister, a friend—or one deeply beloved.

As soon as we have learned to appraise, properly, our values in life, we are not disturbed by petty instances, by regretted mistakes, or anything else. The larger view and the happier vision of our hearts blot out everything else.

Managers Appeal—Rev. A. M.
Mason.

N. G. P. Encampment.—The local committee composed of Penrose Myers, W. H. Tipton, D. M.
Wolf and William F. Codori, who have been laboring diligently to secure the National Guard encampment for this place, called upon Adjutant General Thomas J.
Stewart at Harrisburg last Thursday. The committee informed Mr.
Stewart that they had secured option on the land necessary for the holding of the encampment, and that a considerable sum of money had been subscribed toward defraying the necessary expenses.

Mr. Stewart stated that the sentiment of the officials was in favor of Gettysburg but that "other locations offering great inducements had to be considered."

New Battlefield Policeman.—

THE SPIDER

As I was walking down the street
I crushed a spider 'neath my feet.

A living thing that knew the sun
And died before its work was done;

A living thing that knew the rain
And possibly both joy and pain;

A spider that could spin a lace With more than human skill and grace.

What was its purpose? Why that day
It crossed my path I cannot say.

And yet I wondered, strangely thrilled,
What spider plans my foot had killed.

Would other spiders wait in vain-timed
For one they loved to come again?

Do spiders have their heartaches,
too,
And broken dreams as humans do?

And do they as they spin or creep
Know what it is to laugh or weep?

Or do they merely live and crawl
Only beneath man's foot to fall?

Answer me this, you sages wise:
What happens when a spider dies?

Little Jack Rabbit

By David Cory

Now, let me ponder for a moment. Seems to me I was telling my little readers in the last story of the time I broadcast in Rabbit-land. Professor Jim Crow had asked me to send out a story from Station ABC, Old Old Crow Country, Tall Pine Tree. Oh, yes,
I was telling you how I was repeatedly interrupted by little people in fur and feather, asking me to mention their names over the radio. And just as I closed the last story the telephone went tinkle, tink, blinky blink, and before I could settle my brains to think, the Big Brown Bear shouted:

"Please ask Uncle David Cory to put me in his radio story."

"I'll see what can be done for you," answered Professor Jim Crow. Then, turning to me, he mentioned what the old bear wished, and added: "Hurry up and go on the air; everybody is waiting."

But, gracious me! I was just about to commence when again the little telephone bell stopped me with its silvery yell.

"Please ask David Cory to mention my name," begged Granddad-dy Bullfrog.

"All right, Mr. Bullfrog," answered Professor Jim Crow, and before he could hang up the receiver, Chippy Chipmunk was requesting that I mention his name in my talk.

"Goodness me, if this sort of thing keeps up much longer there will be no story at all."

"Never mind," I answered. "I'll just say hello to everybody. Next time I'll start right off with my story."

And now to go back to our little rabbit. He was listening in for a word when, all of a sudden, his face beamed with smiles. "Uncle Dave just said hello to me," he cried.

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed
the old gentleman rabbit, Mr.
Lucky Lefthindfoot, who was visiting his little bunny nephew at the dear Old Bramble Patch. Pretty soon the radio talk was over, so into the kitchen hopped the two rabbits.

"What have we for supper?"
enquired hungry Uncle Lucky.

"Stewed lollypops," answered busy Lady Love, the little bunny's mother. "Nice fresh lollypops. The Big Brown Bear brought them over only yesterday."

"Did he ask for me?" enquired the little rabbit.

"To be sure," replied Lady Love.
"I told him Uncle Lucky was coming here today."

"Well, I'll stay for a while," chuckled the old gentleman rabbit, picking up a big, juicy yellow lollypop by the stick, just the way people eat asparagus. But, Oh dear me! down ran the yellow juice all over his nice clean vest.
Wasn't that a shame?

"Gracious me, that was a very ripe lolly!" gasped poor Uncle Lucky, carefully wiping the yellow stain that trickled around his gold watch chain.

"I must be careful when I eat Or I'll look anything but neat," and in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

To Identify
Genuine Aspirin

THE increasing use of Bayer Aspirin every year is proof that it has no ill effects. It is the accepted antidote for pain. It always helps; it never harms. Quick relief when you've a headache, or cold, or are suffering from neuralgia or neuritis. Rheumatic pains yield, too, if you'll only give these tablets a chance. But you want genuine Aspirin, so look for the Bayer Cross on every tablet. The box always bears the name Bayer and the word genuine printed in red.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monacetteseide of Salisburgh

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION

A Battle Creek physician says, "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause."

But immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Rexall Orderlies has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lazy, dry, evacuating bowel called the colon. The water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or ever increasing the dose.

Stop suffering from constipation. Chew a Rexall Orderly at night. Next day bright. Get 24 for 25c today at the Peoples Drug Store.—adv.
